Spirit of Jefferson.

Charlestown, Jefferson County, West Va. TUESDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 21, 1873.

A Northern Republican.

The Hon. William Milnes, the owner of the immense iron works in the Page Valley, who is a northern man and a former Republican, made a speech at a Kemper meeting in Harrisonburg a few days since, which is thus sketched by the Whig's correspondent:

"The Hon. William Milnes, who came to this section from Pennsylvania, and who has succeeded in making the great Shenandoah Iron Works one of the most important enterprises in the State, next spoke, and I would that every man, North and South, white and black, could have heard his words of wisdom. When he said that while a Republican at the North he was Conservative in Virginia, and gave his reasons why this was the case, I saw how wise was our convention in making this a State canvass and separating it entirely from Federal and Northern politics. Turning to the colored people, whose friend he has been not only in word but in deed, he declared that their interest was inseparably associated with the success of the Conservative party in November. Who, added he, will now make investments in South Carolina and Louisiana? and if Southern Radicalism ever gets control of Virginia I will have to leave and transfer my means to some point where it will be secure from confiscation by taxation. He believed that if his fellow-Republicans of Penusylvania and other Northern States who mean to do right only knew what Rudicalism at the South means, they would go hand in hand with us in relieving the South of it. When he was at the North last summer his friends expressed surprise at his political course, and his answer was, what would you Pennsylvanians think if all of your revenne offices were filled by Virginians, with a good sprinkling of negroes? and their reply was, we would not stand it for a moment. Then they began to see why Northern Republicans interested in the prosperity of a Southern State, was bound to oppose Southern Radicalism. I have given necessarily, an unsatisfactory outline of the effective speech made by Mr. Milnes, and but express the feelings of those who heard him that he ought to speak during the canvass at other points of the State. His speech seemed to have an immediate effect on the colored people, as several of them met General Kemper as he left the court-house and assured him of their Monument to Confederate Dead.

The Warren (Va.) Index gives the annexed description of a monument just completed for the ladies of the Fauquier Memorial Association : "The base of the monument is from Virginia quarries. The first base is seven feet square, the second five feet square. The uldings, die, shaft and figure of Remem brance are cut from fine white Italian marble. The die is three feet three inches square and four feet in height. On its east panel is chiseled, "Confederate Dead. Six Hundred .-Virginia's Daughters to Virginia's Defenders' On the south panel, "God will judge the right." On the west panel, "Go tell the Southerners that we lie here for the rights of their States. They never fail who die in a great cause."-On its north panel, "Here on the soil of Virginia they sleep as sleeps the hero on his unsurrendered shield." Surmounting the die is a shaft two and a half feet square at its base and thirteen feet high. On its eastern base is carved in bass relief emblems of the artillery, cavalry and infantry service, above which floats the flag of the confederacy. Remembrance, a beautiful female figure of life size. holding in her left hand a book on whose unfolded pages fall the first rays of the rising sun, and in her right hand a wreath of immortelles, completes the structure, the entire height of which is about thirty feet."

The Congressional Chaplaincy.

The following extract of a letter written by Horace Greeley while a member of Congress, in 1848, which we find in Mr. Ingersoll's graceful and impartial Life of Greeley, is no anachronism in these days of Credit Mobilier and Chaplain Newman:

'On the third day, the Senate did not even succeed in forming a quorum, out of fiftyseven or eight members, who are all sure to be in for their pay and mileage, only twentynine appearing in their seats; and the annual hypocrisy of electing a chaplain had to go over and waste another day. If either House had a chaplain who dare preach to its members what they ought to hear-of their faithlessness, their neglect of duty, their iniquitous waste of time, and robbery of the public by taking from the treasury money which they do not even attempt to earnthen there would be some sense in the chaplain business; but any ill-bred Nathan or Elijah who should undertake such a job would be kicked out in short order. So the chaplaincy remains a thing of grimace and mummery, nicely calculated to help some fleckless and complaisant shepherd to a few hundred dollars, and impose upon devout simpletons an exalted notion of the piety of Congress. Should not the truth be spoken?"

- Troublesome people will not let the President and his increased salary of fifty thousand dollars alone. A Mr. Willard has found out that the appropriations for 1873-74 to the expenses of the White House are about seventy seven thousand dollars, in addition to the fifty thousand dollars recently voted .-Most persons think that the President keeps up the White House. Not at all. How erroneous such an idea is will be seen from the following appropriations by Congress: Furnace keepers, $720; two policemen, $2.640; one night watchman, $900; usher, $1,200; two doorkeepers, $2,400; steward, $2,000; messenger, $1,200; secretary and clerk, $10.600; contingent expenses, $6,000; annual repairs White House, $15,000; refurnishing White House, $10,000; fuel, $5,000; green house, $10,000; grounds, $10,000. - When is fire like a bad husband?-

When it goes out at night.

POETICAL.

BENNY'S KISS.

"I will send a kiss to mamma."
And the little or ohan smuled;
"She will know it comes from Benny.
She will whisper 'My sweet child.'
When some little one is passing
To the Savior's arms of love.
I will press its white lips softly;
It will bear the kiss above.

By the token I shall send her.
She will know that I am good;
That I care for little brother,
As I promised her I would;
Thut I say my 'Now I lay me,'
And 'Our Father,' and will try
To be ready for the angels
When they want me by and by.

She is watching for my coming.
She is looking through the gate.
When the happy spirits enter;
But our Father bids her wait.
They have buried her in Graceland.
And the angels spread the snow;
But I'll always send her kisses
By the little ones that go."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE FIRST QUARREL.

OHN ROGERS and Mary Glenn were just married, and were going to housekeeping in the little brown cottage over the Very proud, very happy, and very loving were this young couple, as they walked from the church to the little house that was to be their future home.

Many plans were laid and many resolutions formed, that were to govern their future lives. John was a government clerk on a small salary, but he was very industrious and accurate in all that he did, and stood in a fair way to be promoted.

And it had been only by the strictest economy that enough had been saved to buy and furnish the aforesaid cottage. For John, with a wisdom not always met with among men of his c'ass, had determined to first have a home for his bride before they were married. Mary was left an orphan at a very early age, but by dint of hard labor, and much self depial, had succeeded in giving herself an education, and had been for some years employed as a teacher in the public schools of Greenville, a small town in one of our New England States. It was at this place she first met John Rogers. But, alasi! for the stability of human happiness, the loveliest rose has thorus and the sweetest cup its bitter, and so it proved with our friends, for in about six months they began to find that something besides love is needed for people to live happily together in this, the holiest of earthly relations.

In that time Mary had began to learn that John considered himself master, not only of his home, but also of the woman he called wife. And John saw that, although her love for him remained unchanged, her life in the school-room had entirely unfitted her to perform her role of submission in anything like the manner he considered proper and becoming in a wife. "John," said Mary, one morning at break-the afternoon at her house to-day. May we expect you at tea time. "I cau't see what women always want to be visiting for. If it was me there would be very little visiting done. I think a woman's proper place is at home attending to her family, and not running the streets," was the "But, my dear," replied she, "remember that I have been out but one afternoon since our marriage. Knowing your wishes in that direction I have respected them. And you know that when one stays indoors all day, it is very pleasant to go out, if only to a neighbor's house. However, you did not answer my stripling took the torn standard. In a few question. You will come, will you not?"

"No; I do not think it right to encourage, even by my presence, what I believe to be improper. Now don't cry, if there is anything I detest, it is a woman who is always crying and sniveling," was the unfeeling reply, secing a grieved and disappointed look overspreading her face. Thank you sir, for your opinion of me

It is very pleasant and refreshing, indeed, but since my presence is so distasteful to you, I will no longer intrude myself upon you." saying she arose and walked from the room. The dinner hour that day passed slowly away, for this was their first estrangement, and both felt that an apology was due from the other, and that peace could not be restored until such an apology had been made. Mary felt that she had done or said nothing that called forth such an outburst on his part. And John, though knowing himself to be in the wrong, still looked for some sign of reconciliation from her; for, said he to himself: "Shall I, a man, beg forgiveness of a woman, and that woman my wife? No, never. It would be establishing a dangerous precedent " So the hour passed without any reference being made by either to the occurrence of the morning.

As the hour drew near. Mary started for the residence of her friend, not with any expectation of enjoying herself, for this she felt would be impossible, after what had occurred. But she had promised to be there, and therefore felt that she must go. She had proceeded but a short distance when, on turning the corner, she saw a carriage coming at full speed directly toward her. Escape was impossible, for the horses, mad with fright, reared and plunged, then all was blank. When pext she opened her eyes she was lving on her bed in her own room, and seated at her side, his eyes filled with love and anxiety, was her husband. "Where am I, and how came I here?" said she, essaying to rise, but failing in the at-

"You have been ill, my wife," said her husband, "but you are better now." "But what is the matter?" "You were run over by a pair of frightened horses, and nearly killed. But please God you will soon be well. Not another word now; just try and sleep while I sit and watch with you.'

Too weak for resistence, Mary closed her eyes and was soon in a sweet slumber. When John saw that his wife had fallen asleep, he arose and softly left the room. And what think you, reader, that this strong man did? This man who considered tears a sign of weakness and imbecility. He went to his room and cried for very joy, and get!"

kneeling, he thanked God for sparing him

Mary's recovery after this was rapid. was found that no internal injuries had been sustained, and that though bruised and battered, nothing serious would be the result. One evening after Mary was able to sit up, as she and John were sitting together in the twilight, John said:

"Do you remember, dear, what happened the morning of the day you came so near being taken from me? Well, when I saw you lying so still and white before me I vowed that if God would spare your life, I would beg your forgiveness, for my conduct on that morning."

"Dear John," broke in the sweet voice of his wife, "I, too, need forgiveness, for I was proud and hasty, and since that terrible day, I have been thinking that I have very little of that charity; that suffereth long and is kind."

And then those two old fashioned people shook hands over it, and agreed to say no more about it, but each try to do better in the future. And now, if you visit their home, you will find that no cloud ever comes to mar the brightness of their married life, for John has learned that women have rights to be respected, as well as hearts to be grieved by unkindness.

And Mary has learned to give the "soft answer that turneth away wrath," and living thus in unity and peace, the scene of their first quarrel has never been repeated.

An Amusing Story.

"The man in the gallery," writes to the Albany Times : A gentleman who now occupies a seat in the upper branch, but at the time was a member of the Assembly, relates the following: Perkins was as honest a man as ever set foot in Albany. Money wouldn't buy him, and I knew it, but I thought I would have a little fun with him; so I went down to his room one evening and said : "Perkins, what do you think of that underground railroad bill? Are you going to vote for it?"

"Well," said Perkins, "I have not made up my mind yet, exactly. I am inclined to think it is a good bill, but why do you ask?" "I thought you were in favor of it," said I, "and as long as you have concluded to vote for it, I just want to say that the men interested in it are paying five hundred dollars for votes, and as it is coming up in its final passage to-morrow, you can just as well have the money as not, you will vote for the bill anyway."

"Vote for the bill! I'll be hanged first," exclaimed the irate Perkins. "No, sir I improper means are being adopted to pass this thing, as you say, I, for one, shall vote against it every time. You can't put me down-no!" "Oh, I don't care anything about it. I tho't to do you a favor, and I think I can yet, for, to tell you the truth, the rival companies are here in full force, and are moving heaven and earth to defeat it. They are paying the same amount for 'noes,' and as long as you are bound to vote that way, I'll get you the five hundred all the same." "Can such things be?" exclaimed Perkins rising from his seat, and tearing up and down st, "Mrs. Scever has invited me to spend the room in a whirlwind of righteous wrath and virtuous indignation. "What a state of things this is! A plague on both of our houses -I won't vote at all." "All right," said I, as I laid my hand on the handle of the door, "I'll get you five hundred dollars for being absent.' THE BRAVEST OF THE BRAVE. - Governor Letcher the other day related a very interesting incident of the war, while in Kemper's room at the hotel. He said that in one of the battles below Richmond, four flagbearers had been shot down and a call was made for a volunteer to carry the colors. A minutes the staff was snapped by a shot .-The boy sat down, unloosened a shoe-string and tied it. He started in front again. Another bullet splintered the staff. It was then fastened by the other shoe string. He had hardly shook the folds out a second time, when down fell the flag, struck by a ball .-The shoe-strings had given out. He unbuttoned his jacket, ripped his shirt to ribbons and wrapped the broken rod, and carried the tattered ensign through the fight. Gov. Letcher said, "When they brought me the boy with the shattered Istaff patched up with shoe-strings and shirt-tail, I made him an officer and gave him the best sword Virginia had."

The gallant fellow was from Monroe connty. He was killed in battle .- Lex. Gazette.

Home -Show me a loving husband, worthy wife, and good children, and no pair of horses that ever flew along the road could take me in a year where I could see a more pleasing sight. Home is the grandest of all institutions. Talk about Parliament, give me a quiet little parlor. Boast about voting and the reform bill if you like, but I go in for weeding the little garden, and teaching the children their hymns. Franchise may be a very fine thing, but I should a good deal sooner get the freehold of my cottage, if I could find the money to buy it. A Shower of Chickens.

We had a good deal of trouble in the early part of the summer with Chubb's chickens. As fast as we would plant anything in our little garden, those chickens of Chubb's would creep through the fence, scratch out the seeds, fill-up and go home. When the radish bed had been robbed in this manner the fifth time, we complained to Chubb. He was not disposed to interfere. "Adeler," he said, "I tell you it does 'em good to be raked over by chickens. If I have reddishes, give me chickens to scratch around 'em and cat up the bugs. Reddishes that haven't been scratched, ain't worth a cent" Then we climbed over the fence with a determination to take the law into our own hands. We procured half a peck of corn and two dozen diminutive fish-hooks. Fastening the hooks each into a grain of corn, we tied thin wire to each hook .-Then we scattered the whole of the corn on the radish bed and fixed the ends of the wires to the biggest sky-rocket we could get. The rocket stood in a frame about ten yards away from the hooks. That very morning Chubb's chickens came over and instantly began to deyour the corn. We were ready, and as soon as it was evident that the hooks were all swallowed, we applied a match to that rocket. It is regarded as probable that no barnyard fowls that have lived since the day when the morning stars first sung together, ever proceeded toward the azure vault of Heaven with such rapidity as those did. A fizz, a few ejaculatory cackles, a puff of smoke, and Uhubb's roosters and pullets were swishing around among the celestial constellations without their feathers, and in doubt respecting the stability of earthly things. Chubb never knew what became of his fowls; but when we read in the paper next day that twentyfour underdone chickens, with fish-hooks in their craws, had been rained down by a hurricane in New Jersey, we felt certain that that markable occurrence took place lately in East Lancashire, England. Two Methodist ministers who had been holding open air services on Sunday, were arrested the next day for "obstructing the foot-path." They were tried and found guilty and fined; and on re-fusing to pay they were ordered to prison for

HICKORY BARK FOR COLORING. - Hickory bark will color a beautiful bright yellow that will not fade by use. It will color cotton and wool. Have the bark shaved off or hewed off, and chopped in small pieces, and put in a brass kettle or tin boiler with soft water enough to cover the bark, and boil till the strength is out : then skim out the chips and put in slum. Have it pounded pretty fine. For a pailful of dye I should put in two good handsful, and wet the goods in warm water so there will be no dry spots on them; wring them as dry as you can, shake them out and put them into the dye. Have a stick at hand to push them down and stir them immediately so they can have a chance all over alike. If the color is not deep and bright enough, raise the goods out of the dye, lay them across a stick over the kettle, and put in another handful of alum. Stir it well and dip again, It will want to be kept in the dye and over the fire to a scalding heat an hour, but keep

American, of the date of August 23, 1873: In the early history of our country, all nails were wrought, that is forged by hand. Our currency then was pounds, shillings, and pence. Each sized nails were sold by so many pennies per hundred. The usual way was to ask for fourpenny nails, sixpenny, etc. Hence, in mercantile circles, the sizes were designated by the price in pennies per huadred. When cut nails were introduced, the sizes were still designated by pennies, and in all probability

FOR A CORN .- Put two or three small mother of pearl bottons-commonly called pearl buttons-in any small glass or crockery vessel, squeeze over them a tablespoon or two of lemon juice. Let it stand all night .-There will be a peculiar film cover the top; take this and apply to the corn; let it remain for twelve hours. Should one application not be enough, repeat, and the corn can be easily removed. It is the most certain thing I have ever used for this purpose.

How to BLEACH COTTON CLOTH .- To five pounds of cloth take twelve ounces of chloride of lime. Dissolve the lime in a small. quantity of boiling water; when cold, strain it into a sufficient quantity of water to cover the cloth. This must first be boiled fifteen minutes in strong sospsuds, and rinsed well in clear water. Then put it is the lime-water. from ten to twenty minutes, airing it well by lifting up and down. Riuse thoroughly in warm or cold water.

The other was kept a prisoner for two days when somebody paid for him also. He was forced to walk the street one day handcuffed to a felon; and every night in his cell he was kept awake by repeated calls of the officers, who, being afraid he would kill himself, would not let him alone. When both prisoners were once more at liberty a grand demonstration of dissenters took place to express sympathy for the abused parties. Resolutions were passed declaring the right to hold and the need of holding out-door meetings. As usual, and as ill-wishers never seem to comprehend, the result of the persecution is a great strengthening of the dissenters and a general outpouring
